

THE SOUL IN PARAPHRASE

THE SOUL IN PARAPHRASE

A Treasury of Classic Devotional Poems

Leland Ryken, editor

 CROSSWAY[®]
WHEATON, ILLINOIS

The Soul in Paraphrase: A Treasury of Classic Devotional Poems

Copyright © 2018 by Leland Ryken

Published by Crossway
1300 Crescent Street
Wheaton, Illinois 60187

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopy, recording, or otherwise, without the prior permission of the publisher, except as provided for by USA copyright law. Crossway® is a registered trademark in the United States of America.

Cover design: Jordan Singer

First printing 2018

Printed in China

Scripture quotations are from the ESV® Bible (The Holy Bible, English Standard Version®), copyright © 2001 by Crossway, a publishing ministry of Good News Publishers. Used by permission. All rights reserved.

All emphases in Scripture quotations have been added by the author.

Hardcover ISBN: 978-1-4335-5861-0

ePub ISBN: 978-1-4335-5864-1

PDF ISBN: 978-1-4335-5862-7

Mobipocket ISBN: 978-1-4335-5863-4

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Names: Ryken, Leland, editor.

Title: The soul in paraphrase: a treasury of classic devotional poems / Leland Ryken, editor.

Other titles: Treasury of classic devotional poems | Devotional poems

Description: Wheaton, Ill.: Crossway, 2018. | Includes bibliographical references and index.

Identifiers: LCCN 2018005833 (print) | LCCN 2018014966 (ebook) | ISBN 9781433558627 (pdf) | ISBN

9781433558634 (mobi) | ISBN 9781433558641 (epub) | ISBN 9781433558610 (hc)

Subjects: LCSH: Spiritual life—Poetry. | Christian poetry, English. | Christian poetry, American. | Religious poetry.

Classification: LCC PN6071.S615 (ebook) | LCC PN6071.S615 S63 2018 (print) | DDC 821.008/03823—dc23

LC record available at <https://lcn.loc.gov/2018005833>

Crossway is a publishing ministry of Good News Publishers.

RRDS 28 27 26 25 24 23 22 21 20 19 18
15 14 13 12 11 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

for Margaret and Jeff

Contents

Editor's Introduction	13
Caedmon's Hymn (Caedmon)	19
The Dream of the Rood (Anonymous)	21
O What Their Joy and Their Glory Must Be (Abelard)	25
Canticle of the Sun (St. Francis)	28
Sunset on Calvary (Anonymous)	31
I Sing of a Maiden (Anonymous)	33
Hand in Hand We Shall Take (Anonymous)	36
Leave Me, O Love, Which Reachest but to Dust (Sidney)	38
Most Glorious Lord of Life (Spenser)	40
O Gracious Shepherd (Constable)	42
When in Disgrace with Fortune and Men's Eyes (Shakespeare)	44
That Time of Year Thou Mayest in Me Behold (Shakespeare)	46
Let Me Not to the Marriage of True Minds Admit Impediments (Shakespeare)	49
Poor Soul, the Center of My Sinful Earth (Shakespeare)	52
The Quality of Mercy Is Not Strained (Shakespeare)	54
Yet If His Majesty (Anonymous)	56
Thou Hast Made Me, and Shall Thy Work Decay? (Donne)	59
As Due by Many Titles I Resign (Donne)	61
Oh My Black Soul (Donne)	64

This Is My Play's Last Scene (Donne)	67
At the Round Earth's Imagined Corners (Donne)	69
Death, Be Not Proud (Donne)	72
Spit in My Face, You Jews (Donne)	74
Batter My Heart (Donne)	76
Wilt Thou Love God as He Thee? (Donne)	78
A Hymn on the Nativity of My Savior (Jonson)	81
Aaron (Herbert)	84
Redemption (Herbert)	86
Prayer (Herbert)	88
Virtue (Herbert)	90
The Pulley (Herbert)	92
The Agony (Herbert)	94
Love (Herbert)	96
The Twenty-Third Psalm (Herbert)	98
The Elixir (Herbert)	101
Easter (Herbert)	103
The Collar (Herbert)	105
Sunday (Herbert)	108
He Bore Our Grievs (Revius)	111
His Savior's Words, Going to the Cross (Herrick)	113
His Litany to the Holy Spirit (Herrick)	115
On Time (Milton)	118
How Soon Hath Time (Milton)	120
Lady That in the Prime of Earliest Youth (Milton)	122
When Faith and Love (Milton)	124
Avenge, O Lord, Thy Slaughtered Saints (Milton)	126
When I Consider How My Light Is Spent (Milton)	129

Methought I Saw My Late Espoused Saint (Milton)	131
Greatly Instructed I Shall Hence Depart (Milton)	133
Verses upon the Burning of Our House (Bradstreet)	135
Poverty (Traherne)	139
Peace (Vaughan)	142
Easter Hymn (Vaughan)	145
The Dawning (Vaughan)	147
The Waterfall (Vaughan)	150
They Are All Gone into the World of Light (Vaughan)	153
When in Mid-Air, the Golden Trump Shall Sound (Dryden)	156
Veni, Creator Spiritus [“Come, Creator Spirit”] (Dryden)	159
The Spacious Firmament on High (Addison)	162
When Rising from the Bed of Death (Addison)	164
The Dying Christian to His Soul (Pope)	167
Huswifery (Taylor)	169
Infinity, When All Things It Beheld (Taylor)	171
The Resignation (Chatterton)	173
The Lamb (Blake)	176
And Did Those Feet (Blake)	178
The Destruction of Sennacherib (Byron)	181
Lines Written in Early Spring (Wordsworth)	184
Earth Has Not Anything to Show More Fair (Wordsworth)	187
To a Waterfowl (Bryant)	189
The Snow-Storm (Emerson)	192
Strong Son of God, Immortal Love (Tennyson)	195
Crossing the Bar (Tennyson)	198
In the Bleak Midwinter (Rossetti)	200
Good Friday (Rossetti)	202

Up-Hill (Rossetti)	204
Pied Beauty (Hopkins)	206
Spring (Hopkins)	209
The Windhover (Hopkins)	211
God's Grandeur (Hopkins)	214
O World Invisible, We View Thee (Thompson)	216
A Prayer in Spring (Frost)	219
Journey of the Magi (Eliot)	221
Two Poems on Death and Immortality (Dickinson)	224
Nature as God's Revelation (Lanier and Coleridge)	227
Sunday Worship (Smart and Coleridge)	229
Christmas Day (Anonymous and Milton)	232
Nature as a Religious Experience (Wordsworth)	235
The Consolations of Providence (Milton and Shakespeare)	238
Certainty of Faith (Brontë and Dickinson)	241
Our Only Secure Home (Anonymous)	244
Biographical Notes	247
Sources and Acknowledgments	251
Scripture Index	257
Person Index	261

Editor's Introduction

This book is an anthology of the best devotional poetry in English. It begins with the oldest surviving poem in the English language and ends with the modern era. The structure of the book is chronological, but this is a convenience of organization only. Christian poetry is timeless and universal. What the poems in this anthology share with each other is more important than traits arising from when they were written, giving us a new slant on the apostle Paul's formula of "the faith that was once for all delivered" (Jude 3).

No single definition can encompass the genre of devotional poetry, so in the next several paragraphs I will describe it from complementary angles. The first thing to note is that devotional poetry is not in any sense to be equated with so-called inspirational verse of the type that appears on greeting cards. The more I surveyed existing anthologies of "Christian verse" (or a variant), the more disillusioned I became. Most of the material is versified prose. The content is thin and confined, producing what I call "bits and pieces" poetry. The poems in this anthology are substantial in the ways I am about to define. In order to be included in this anthology, poems needed to lend themselves to the kind of literary analysis that I conduct as a professor of literature and writer of literary criticism. If all that a poem lends itself to is mere reading as opposed to analysis and explication, it needs to be judged to be of limited substance.

Most devotional poetry takes specifically spiritual experience for its subject matter, though I will shortly qualify that. While Christian poets are free to take all of life as their subject—and in fact it is highly desirable that as a group they do so—devotional poetry tends to take specifically religious life as its subject. Examples are the person and work of God, conviction and confession of sin, forgiveness, worship of God, and the church calendar with events like Christmas and Easter.

Devotional poetry is also definable by its effect on a reader. If a poem prompts us to think about God and spiritual truth, if it deepens our spiritual insight and experience, and if it awakens a greater love of God and desire to be like him, it has served a devotional purpose. Devotional poetry fixes our thoughts on the spiritual life and inspires us toward excellence in it. To define devotional poetry by its effect is a subjective definition, balancing a more objective definition based on the content of a poem.

Defining devotional poetry by its effect opens the door to a broader field of candidates. Inclusion now depends on how a reader assimilates a poem. If a given reader experiences a poem as defined in the preceding paragraph, it fits the category of devotional poetry for that reader.

We can place this line of thought into the following paradigm for all of literature. Literature as a whole divides itself into three groups, viewed as existing on a continuum.

Literature of Christian Belief	Literature of Common Experience	Literature of Unbelief
-----------------------------------	------------------------------------	---------------------------

On one end of the continuum we find the literature of Christian belief, and on the other end the literature of unbelief. Between these stands a category that can be called the literature of common experience or the literature of clarification (meaning that its chief feature is that it clarifies life). The literature of common experience does not signal a specifically Christian identity but is congruent with Christianity (if it were not, it would belong to the literature of unbelief). A work in this neutral category may have even been written by a Christian.

When Christian readers assimilate such literature in terms of who they are as Christians, the literature can become devotional. We might think of the transaction in terms of imposing a fuller Christian understanding on material that stopped short of such an understanding. Another formula by which to understand the situation is this: if as Christian readers we cannot read X [a specific work belonging to the category of common experience and humanity] without thinking of Y [an aspect of the Christian life], the work has yielded a Christian reading experience.

In this anthology I have included several poems that belong to the category of the poetry of common experience or clarification. I will use my accompanying commentary to show how these poems can be read devotionally. My rationale for including them is twofold: (1) they are too good to bypass in an anthology of my favorite devotional poems, and (2) I want to plant a seed in my readers that can lead them to nudge ideationally neutral literature into their repertoire of Christian reading.

Devotional poems are lyric poems. Lyric poems, in turn, are either (a) meditative and reflective in nature, or (b) emotional and affective. In the first instance, the poet shares more and more of his or her thought process as the poem unfolds. In an affective lyric, we learn more and more about the poet's feelings.

Two English poets of towering stature have provided an additional helpful way of understanding this. John Milton, who turned from a possible ministerial career to his life's calling as a poet when his Puritan convictions prevented him from entering the Anglican Church, was so convinced of the worthiness of poetry that he claimed that the poet's abilities "are of power beside [equal to] the office of a pulpit" to produce good in people and societies. One of these effects, according to Milton, was that poetry can "set the affections [the old word for emotions] in right tune."

To this we can add a similar viewpoint expressed by the nineteenth-century poet William Wordsworth. Wordsworth was of the opinion that "a great poem ought to . . . rectify men's feeling, to give them new compositions of feeling." If we extend this principle to a reflective lyric, we can say that poetry can rectify our thinking as well as our feeling.

Applied to the poems that comprise this anthology, we can read the poems as setting our thoughts and feelings in right tune, and also some of the time correcting them. The same is true when we read the Psalms, and this is a good place to remind ourselves that devotional poetry of the type that appears in this anthology finds its prototype in the Bible.

The poets who composed the poems in this anthology are ministering spirits to us, serving us in ways that they could never have imagined. Their poems have two aspects—form and content. Both are important. Because the content is what expresses the specifically devotional aspect of the poems, it would be possible to overlook the artistry and verbal beauty of their poems.

To overlook the artistry would be a great mistake, for at least three reasons. First, there is no content without the form in which it is expressed, so it is ultimately impossible to disregard the poetic form. Second, it is true of any discourse that beauty and skill of expression increase the impact of what is said, so we need to honor that beauty and skill. Third, beauty matters to God and to poets as they ply their trade as creators made in God's image. For that reason, we need to ensure that beauty also matters to us as readers. The artistic dimension of the poems in this anthology is an important part of the poems' ability to set our thoughts and feelings in right tune, and I have accordingly paid this artistry its due in my explications of the poems.

I am reminded in this regard of a comment that a literary scholar made about Milton's funeral poem entitled "Lycidas," written on the occasion of the death by drowning of a fellow college student. The critic offered the opinion that the beauty of the poem actually consoles, in a spiritual as well as artistic sense. That expresses exactly how I have always experienced the poem. Milton himself said that one of the effects of Christian poetry is that it sets the emotions in right tune, and the verbal beauty and broader artistic effects of a poem are among the qualities that enable that to happen.

A poem that requires more pondering and analysis from us than a poem that requires less is a poem that yields more. In saying that, I am not endorsing obscure poetry but rather poetry that possesses a certain degree of complexity and a multi-layered quality. The more we need to wrestle with a poem's language, structure, and turns of phrase, the more profundity of meaning and richness of experience it will reveal. A perfect example is the four-line medieval poem "Sunset on Calvary" (see page 31). I am sure that some of my readers will be surprised by the quantity of analysis I provide for only four lines, but this is a tribute to (a) how much there is in the poem and (b) how much spiritual devotion is available to us if we unpack the riches.

The main title of this anthology, The Soul in Paraphrase, is taken from a poem by George Herbert. In its original context, this epithet is applied to prayer, but it is equally accurate as a description of devotional poetry. To paraphrase something means to put it into our own words. That is what the poets represented in this anthology have done: they have put the spiritual motions of their soul into their own words. In doing so, they have become our representatives, saying what we too want said, only saying it better.

I have taken the liberty of modernizing spelling, capitalizing, and punctuation in all instances where I thought that not doing so would be an obstacle to my readers. Much poetry from bygone centuries was originally published with arbitrary indentations of lines. Usually I have regarded this as an unnecessary impediment to my readers (as it is to me), so I have generally started all lines flush with the left margin.

I have divided my commentary on the poems into two units. I have labeled one of them “notes on selected words.” Much of my “close reading” of the poems appears in this unit, which should be regarded as essential rather than optional. Composing this unit has greatly enlarged my understanding of the poems, and I can see belatedly how much I have missed during the past half century by not paying closer attention to every word in a poem. The second unit of analysis is simply “commentary,” which I slanted in two directions—general enhancement of a reader’s experience of the artistry of a given poem and notes on the specifically devotional aspect of a poem.

The last nine entries in this anthology are pairs of poems on a common theme. These poems are too brief to be an entry by themselves, but they form a perfect combination for devotional thought when paired together.

The subtitle of this anthology calls the collected poems a treasure. That is what they are. They are one of God’s greatest gifts to the human race, waiting to be cherished by Christians.

Caedmon's Hymn

CAEDMON (SEVENTH CENTURY)

Now we must praise the Keeper of Heaven's Kingdom,
The might of the Maker and his wisdom,
The work of the Glory-Father, when he of every wonder,
The eternal Lord, the beginning established.

He first created for the sons of earth
Heaven as a roof, Holy Creator,
Then middle-earth the Protector of mankind,
Eternal Lord, afterwards made,
The earth for men, the Lord Almighty.

Notes on selected words. Keeper: guardian or ruler. Might: power. The Maker: could also be translated “the Measurer,” with architectural overtones. Wisdom: “mind-plans” in the original Old English, with the implication of thoughtful purpose and careful planning. The Glory-Father: God of glory. Heaven [line 6]: the sky. Middle-earth: standard term for earth in the Old and Middle English periods.

Commentary. This poem (originally written in Old English and here translated by Leland Ryken) is the oldest surviving poem in the English language. The story of its origin is as famous as the poem. The story was recorded by the Venerable Bede in his Ecclesiastical History of the English People (c. 730). Caedmon was an illiterate farmhand residing at Whitby Abbey in northeast England. Whenever the harp was passed around the dining hall at feasts so residents of the abbey could take turns singing, Caedmon found an excuse to leave the meal early. On one of these occasions, Caedmon went to the barn and fell asleep. In a dream, he heard someone telling him to sing something. Caedmon replied that he did not know how to sing. "Sing about creation," the visitor replied. Thereupon Caedmon sang the song known as "Caedmon's Hymn." The new poetic gift never left Caedmon. English poetry thus began with a miracle of the word.

"Caedmon's Hymn" is an example of the artistic category that we can call "the simple as a form of beauty." Only nine lines long, the poem follows the biblical genre known as the psalm of praise. The content of the praise comes straight from the creation story in Genesis 1. It is an abbreviated account of that story, taking a wide-angle view of God's first creating the entire world and then the earth specifically as a provision for people.

The poem does three things that praise psalms typically do: (1) it begins with a formal call to praise God (the first stanza); (2) it provides a list or catalog of God's praiseworthy acts; and (3) it rounds off the praise with a note of closure in the last line. This simplicity is played off against two pleasing forms of stylistic formality and artistry. First, Caedmon loaded his poem with phrases and clauses that name the same phenomena with different words, a technique influenced by the biblical verse form of parallelism. Second, our spirit is elevated by exalted titles for God, a technique known as epithets. For example, the first epithet in the poem is the Keeper of Heaven's Kingdom.

Structurally the poem falls into complementary halves, as signaled by the stanzaic arrangement. The first stanza praises God's sovereignty in creating the entire cosmos, and the epithets for God accordingly stress his transcendence. The second stanza praises God's creative acts on behalf of humankind, as the cosmic imagery of the first stanza gives way to a vocabulary of earth and people.

The Dream of the Rood

ANONYMOUS (POSSIBLY EIGHTH CENTURY)

Listen, I will tell of the best of visions, which came to me in the middle of the night. . . .
Lying there a long while,
in sorrow I beheld the Savior's tree,
until I heard it utter a sound;
the best of wood began to speak these words:

[The personified cross tells the story of the crucifixion:]

It was long ago—I still remember it—that I was cut down from the edge of the forest, ripped up by my roots. Strong enemies seized me there, made me their spectacle, forced me to bear criminals. . . .
I was raised as a cross; I lifted up a mighty King,
the Lord of heaven; I did not dare to bend.
They pierced me with dark nails; I bear the scars,
the open wounds of hatred. . . .
They mocked us both together. I was drenched with blood that flowed from that man's side after he had sent forth his spirit. . . .

[The personified cross describes its present glory in the world:]

Now the time has come when men will honor me far and wide over the earth and all this glorious creation, and pray to this beacon. On me the Son of God suffered for a while. I am therefore glorious now,

The Dream of the Rood

and rise under the heavens, able to heal each one of those who will reverence me. . . .

[The cross entrusts the speaker/dreamer with a task:]

Now I command you, my beloved man, that you reveal this vision to men;
tell them in word that it is the tree of glory on which almighty God suffered for mankind's many sins
and Adam's ancient deeds.
Death he tasted there, yet God rose again
by his great might to help mankind.
He ascended into heaven. He will come again to this middle-earth to seek mankind on doomsday. . . .

[The speaker's testimony to the power of the cross:]

Then I prayed to the cross with a happy heart and great zeal, where I was alone with little company. My spirit was inspired for the journey forward. . . .

It is now my life's hope that I might seek the tree of victory alone more than all men, to honor it well. My desire for that is much in my mind, and my hope of protection is fixed on the cross. . . .

May the Lord be my friend,
he who here on earth suffered on the hanging-tree for the sins of man.
He ransomed us and gave us life,
a heavenly home. . . .

The Son was victorious in that venture, mighty and successful, when he came with a multitude,
a great host of souls, into God's kingdom,
the one Ruler almighty, to the joy of angels and all the saints already in heaven, dwelling in glory, when their Ruler, almighty God, came to his rightful homeland.

Notes on selected words. Rood: cross. The best of wood: an epithet denoting the cross. My beloved man: the speaker in the poem; the one who received the vision that the poem records. Adam's ancient deeds: original sin; the disobedience in the garden and its effects in the world. Middle-earth: medieval designation for the earth. Doomsday: the judgment day, or last day.

Commentary. This poem was originally written in Old English and is here translated by Leland Ryken. The poem as printed here is excerpted from a longer poem.

The devotional potential of this poem lies in its theme, namely, the power of the cross. Everything in the poem relates to that. The poem draws upon a favorite genre of the Middle Ages known as the dream vision. This genre is prominent in the Bible and in subsequent literary history (with John Bunyan's The Pilgrim's Progress being a famous example). In this genre, a speaker or narrator pictures himself as receiving a vision. This is only the external framework; the content of the imagined vision is what the poem is actually about. The opening lines of this poem introduce this visionary framework, as the speaker announces to us that he heard the cross of Christ speak to him in a dream.

After this opening, the poem unfolds in four movements, each one represented briefly in the excerpted version above. First the cross describes the circumstances of Christ's crucifixion; the devotional aspect is that we are led to ponder the physical suffering and torture of Christ's crucifixion. Next the cross asserts that glory has come to it because of the victory that Jesus achieved on the cross. Third, the cross charges the speaker/dreamer with the task of testifying about the cross in the world by declaring the gospel to humankind. The poem then reaches its climax in the concluding section, where the speaker testifies to what the cross means to him in his journey of life. At the very end of this section, the poem draws upon

40
Favorite Hymns
on the Christian Life

40
Favorite Hymns
on the Christian Life

A CLOSER LOOK AT THEIR SPIRITUAL AND POETIC MEANING

LELAND RYKEN

P U B L I S H I N G
P.O. BOX 817 • PHILLIPSBURG • NEW JERSEY 08865-0817

© 2019 by Leland Ryken

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means—electronic, mechanical, photocopy, recording, or otherwise—except for brief quotations for the purpose of review or comment, without the prior permission of the publisher, P&R Publishing Company, P.O. Box 817, Phillipsburg, New Jersey 08865-0817.

Unless otherwise indicated, Scripture quotations are from the ESV® Bible (The Holy Bible, English Standard Version®), copyright © 2001 by Crossway, a publishing ministry of Good News Publishers. Used by permission. All rights reserved.

Scripture quotations marked (KJV) are taken from the King James Version.

Italics within Scripture quotations indicate emphasis added.

Permission to reprint the following three hymns is hereby gratefully acknowledged:

“Tell Out, My Soul.” Words: Timothy Dudley-Smith. © 1962, Ren. 1990 Hope Publishing Company, Carol Stream, IL 60188. All rights reserved. Used by permission.

“How Great Thou Art.” Words: Stuart K. Hine. Music: Swedish folk melody/adapt. and arr. Stuart K. Hine. © 1949, 1953 The Stuart Hine Trust CIO. All rights in the USA its territories and possessions, except print rights, administered by Capitol CMG Publishing. USA, North and Central American print rights and all Canadian and South American rights administered by Hope Publishing Company. All other North and Central American rights administered by The Stuart Hine Trust CIO. Rest of the world rights administered by Integrity Music Europe. All rights reserved. Used by permission.

“In Christ Alone.” Writers: Keith Getty and Stuart Townend. Copyright © 2002 Thankyou Music (PRS) (adm. Worldwide at CapitolCMGPublishing.com excluding Europe which is adm. by Integrity Music, part of the David C. Cook family. Songs@integrity music.com) All rights reserved. Used by permission.

All other hymn texts reprinted in this anthology are in the public domain.

Printed in the United States of America

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Names: Ryken, Leland, author.

Title: 40 favorite hymns on the Christian life : a closer look at their spiritual and poetic meaning / Leland Ryken.

Other titles: Forty favorite hymns on the Christian life

Description: Phillipsburg : P&R Publishing, 2019. | Includes bibliographical references.

Identifiers: LCCN 2018043560 | ISBN 9781629956176 (hardcover) | ISBN 9781629956183 (epub) | ISBN 9781629956190 (mobi)

Subjects: LCSH: Hymns--History and criticism. | Christian life--Miscellanea.

Classification: LCC BV310 .R95 2019 | DDC 264/.23--dc23

LC record available at <https://lccn.loc.gov/2018043560>

For Nancy and Jeremy

Contents

Introduction	11
Holy, Holy, Holy Reginald Heber	15
O for a Thousand Tongues to Sing Charles Wesley	18
Amazing Grace John Newton	21
Fairest Lord Jesus Author Unknown	24
Jesus, Thou Joy of Loving Hearts Bernard of Clairvaux	27
The Church's One Foundation Samuel John Stone	30
Come, We That Love the Lord Isaac Watts	34
Just as I Am Charlotte Elliott	37
And Can It Be? Charles Wesley	40

How Firm a Foundation	44
Author Unknown
Crown Him with Many Crowns	47
Matthew Bridges; Godfrey Thring
All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name	51
Edward Perronet
O Worship the King	54
Sir Robert Grant
Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing	57
Robert Robinson
Love Divine, All Loves Excelling	61
Charles Wesley
Like a River Glorious	64
Frances Ridley Havergal
In Christ Alone	68
Keith Getty and Stuart Townend
Rock of Ages	71
Augustus Toplady
How Great Thou Art	74
Stuart K. Hine
It Is Well with My Soul	78
Horatio Spafford
Abide with Me	81
Henry Lyte
Ye Holy Angels Bright	84
Richard Baxter

A Mighty Fortress Is Our God Martin Luther	88
Come, Thou Almighty King Author Unknown	92
Tell Out, My Soul Timothy Dudley-Smith	95
Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah William Williams	98
Be Thou My Vision Author Unknown	101
A Shelter in the Time of Storm Vernon J. Charlesworth	104
Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken John Newton	107
Jesus Shall Reign Isaac Watts	111
My Hope Is Built on Nothing Less Edward Mote	114
Savior, Like a Shepherd Lead Us Dorothy Thrupp	117
Take My Life, and Let It Be Frances Ridley Havergal	121
May the Mind of Christ My Savior Kate B. Wilkinson	124
To God Be the Glory Fanny J. Crosby	127

Christ Is Made the Sure Foundation	130
John M. Neale
God Moves in a Mysterious Way	134
William Cowper
Fill Thou My Life, O Lord My God	137
Horatius Bonar
Jesus, the Very Thought of Thee	140
Bernard of Clairvaux
Praise to the Lord, the Almighty	143
Joachim Neander
Conclusion	147
Notes	149
Glossary of Literary Terms	153

Introduction

IT will doubtless surprise most readers to learn that until 1870, the customary format of a hymnal was a small (five-by-three-inch) book consisting of words only. The most accurate designation for such a book is an “anthology of devotional poems.” These anthologies were carried back and forth between home and office and school and church. Forty Favorite Hymns on the Christian Life seeks to revive this tradition of experiencing familiar hymns as poems.

Among several good reasons for such a revival is the fact that every hymn is a poem first, and only later becomes a hymn. As a verbal text, a hymn possesses all the qualities of a poem. Only when it is paired with music does it become a hymn. Much is gained by the singing of hymns accompanied by music, but much is also lost.

This anthology of hymnic poems aims to restore what has been lost. An immediate gain comes from reading the successive stanzas in linear fashion, with one stanza following its predecessor. Our gaze keeps moving forward instead of returning to the same starting point at the beginning of each stanza. The result is a clear sense of the sequential progression of thought and feeling, as it grows organically from beginning to end.

A second advantage of reading a hymn as a poem is that we can read slowly instead of being hurried along by the music and singing. Poetry is concentrated, and it accordingly requires pondering and analyzing. When reading a poem, we can take as long as the text requires. Such contemplative reading allows us to pause on individual images, letting the literal picture register in our imagination and then noting the connotations and emotions that flow from each image. Figures of speech such as metaphors and similes likewise ask to have their meanings unpacked.

Much of the beauty that we experience when we sing hymns is the beauty of the music. Experiencing hymns as poems puts the focus on the verbal beauty of the words and phrases. The great hymns of Christian tradition are an untapped source of devotional poetry, just waiting to be made available for the pleasure and edification of Christians.

It is not an overstatement to claim that this anthology of hymns presented and analyzed as devotional poems will introduce readers to the hymns they never knew. Readers will realize that they have been deprived of a treasure that was never opened to them.

Every entry in this anthology consists of three elements—a hymnic poem, an explication of the poem, and a passage from the Bible that ties into the hymn and its explication. The Bible passages are intended to enhance the reading of this book for devotional purposes.

THE explications of the poems should be used as a lens through which to look closely at the accompanying texts. They are not a substitute for the poems, nor are they detachable pieces of information. They function as a travel guide at a site, interpreting what the travelers are looking at and bringing out features that would otherwise be missed. There is no prescribed order for reading a poem and its accompanying explication, but regardless of whether you read the poem or the explication first, the explication is designed to send you back to the text repeatedly. For example, every explication includes an account of the flow of the successive stanzas or sections of the poem under consideration and examines how different rhetorical and literary techniques are used in each one. Thus, if the explication says something about image patterns or allusions, that insight comes to fruition only if you go back to the text and see how the statement in the explication is true. This book will achieve its intended purpose only if you go back and forth between a poem and its accompanying explication.

Introduction

A glossary at the back of the book gives definitions for the poetic and literary terms that will be used in the discussions of the different poems.

Holy, Holy, Holy

Reginald Heber (1783–1826)

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty!
Early in the morning our song shall rise to thee.
Holy, holy, holy! Merciful and mighty,
God in three persons, blessed Trinity!

Holy, holy, holy! All the saints adore thee,
Casting down their golden crowns around the glassy sea;
Cherubim and seraphim falling down before thee,
Who wert and art and evermore shalt be.

Holy, holy, holy! Though the darkness hide thee,
Though the eye of sinful man thy glory may not see,
Only thou art holy; there is none beside thee,
Perfect in power, in love, and purity.

Holy, holy, holy! Lord God Almighty!
All thy works shall praise thy name, in earth and sky and sea.
Holy, holy, holy! Merciful and mighty,
God in three persons, blessed Trinity!

THE importance of this hymn, which was first published in 1826, is suggested by the fact it belongs to a very elite circle of hymns that are included in nearly every English-language hymnbook. It was well regarded in its own day, as well—the Victorian poet Alfred, Lord Tennyson is well attested to have admired this hymn in particular.

Holy, Holy, Holy

The high style of the poem is its most obvious formal quality. Among the features of this high style are exalted epithets for God and the piling up of adjectives, nouns, and verbs in patterns of two and three, creating an effect of irrepressible energy. An example is “perfect in power, in love, and purity.” The dominant tone is exaltation. This exuberance is enhanced by the length of the lines, which are nearly twice as long as what we find in most hymns. Despite this grandeur, there is a single rhyming sound (the long e) for the entire poem.

Multiple genres converge in this exalted poem. Despite its brevity, the poem can be called an ode, which handbooks define as an exalted poem on a dignified subject written in the high style. Most odes praise their subject, and this poem fits the pattern, thereby also qualifying as a psalm of praise. Because the speaker in the poem addresses God directly, the poem is also a prayer. And since the opening line is an English translation of a line from ancient church liturgy, the adjective liturgical is an accurate one to attach to the poem. In this vein, we might note that Reginald Heber, an Anglican clergyman, composed the hymn for Trinity Sunday.

Because of the conspicuous repetition of the word holy, it would be easy to conclude that God’s holiness is the theme of the poem, but that would be misleading. The ascription of holiness to God is part of the more general theme of the worthiness of God’s character. Other aspects of God’s worthiness are also praised. Under the unifying umbrella of God’s worthiness of praise, the poet constructs a mosaic of specific variations on the central theme: God’s holiness, God’s existence as a Trinity, the attributes of God (with mercy, might, glory, power, love, and purity all mentioned), the universality with which God is extolled (by people in stanza 1, by saints and angels in stanza 2, and by the creatures of nature in stanza 4). Stanza 3 is a kind of “aside” in which the poet pauses to note that human sinfulness has a way of obscuring people’s ability to perceive God’s glory.

Holy, Holy, Holy

The triumph of this poem is that it sweeps us up and makes us participants in the very praise that, according to the poem, the universe is already ascribing to God on earth and in heaven.

IT is nearly certain that the poet composed this exalted hymn of praise with Revelation 4:8, 10–11 serving as his model:

The four living creatures . . . never cease to say,

“Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord God Almighty . . . !”

. . . The twenty-four elders fall down before him who is seated on the throne and worship him who lives forever and ever. They cast their crowns before the throne, saying,

“Worthy are you, our Lord and God, to receive glory and honor and power.”